WYRICK ROBBINS

Hometown: Rhinelander, Wisconsin

Undergrad: Duke University

Law school: New York University School of Law, 2005

Practiced law: 19 years

Family: Husband, David, and two sons, ages 11 and 13

ANALYTICAL & PRATICAL

FIRST JOB: As a teenage day camp counselor, I often worked alone at a small public park for seven hours. My job was to entertain a dozen kids between the ages of 5 and 12.

WORKING SMARTER: I used to personally answer every question I was asked. Learning to delegate ultimately empowers others and provides better client service.

FAVORITE NORTH CAROLINA PLACE: The mountains, especially Boone and Blowing Rock.

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED: Hiking a glacier

STILL ON BUCKET LIST: Scuba diving

STRESS RELIEVER: Reading – but the book can't be too good or I stay up all night!

WHY I BECAME A LAWYER: I wanted to use the law to help guide decisions for long-term or society-wide benefits, rather than immediate self-interest.

ALTERNATIVE CAREER CHOICE: Cognitive psychology research

YOUR EDGE: I like solving problems and am not afraid to tackle new things.

2025 MILESTONES: Completing our first Hart-Scott-Rodino filing under the newly revised rules.

PASSIONS: Travel and spending time with my family.

LAW SCHOOL IN 2 OR 3 YEARS: Two years would be enough for many practice areas and would reduce financial burdens on students. Law schools might develop externship-type programs for a third year of specialization.
